International and Global Studies Minor

Spanish Paths

Taking Spanish courses? Want to use the language for a project in a Spanish-speaking country? Then consider an International and Global Studies minor with a “Spanish track” or “Latin America track” (described separately).

A global project and three courses from the humanities and arts or social science requirements may count towards the minor. Double-counted courses may be counted anywhere across the International and Global Studies “core” or “electives.” Students must take the senior seminar (INTL 4100) and two other courses for this minor that do not count for another degree requirement.

International and Global Core
The core requires two international and global history or social science courses and INTL 4100, Senior Seminar in International and Global Studies. There are many options for the Spanish Track. Here are some examples.

1 unit International and Global Core
One International History and Social Science Course
ID 2050 Social Science Research for the IQP
INTL 4100 Senior Seminar in International and Global Studies
1 unit International and Global Electives (Humanities, Social Science or Business courses)
Three courses in Spanish (of the six courses in Spanish for the Humanities requirement)
IQP at any of the project centers in Latin America

OR:

1 unit International and Global Core
INTL 2900 Topics in Global Studies
SP 3523 Topics in Latin American Culture
INTL 4100 Senior Seminar in International and Global Studies
1 unit International and Global Electives (Humanities, Social Science or Business courses)
FY 1100 Great Problems Seminar
SP 3524 Spanish-American Film/Media
SP 3527 Technical and Business Spanish
IQP at any of the project centers in Latin America

The “Spanish track” is a sample program that demonstrates how students with experience at a Project Center may shape the minor to meet their goals. You don’t need to follow a “track” to do the minor. For further information about the program, consult: http://www.wpi.edu/+IN
